INFORMATION

Kai Province

Takeda Shingen (1521-1573)
One of many warlords in the Sengoku (Warring States) period. Ruler of the Kai Province. Among all the warlords, he was the only one with enough power to oppose Oda Nobunaga. He was also a wise political administrator. Later in life, he became a Buddhist monk, but he didn't give up his wild lifestyle (he had dozens of concubines, male and female).

Yukimura Sanada (1567-1615)
Possibly the most esteemed tactician of the Sengoku period (although you wouldn't know it from this manga). He served the warlord Takeda Shingen until the fall of the Takeda clan, and was then a major rival to the first Tokugawa shogun, Ieyasu.

Sarutobi Sasuke (??)
One of ten ninja bodyguards that were said to have served Yukimura in the Sengoku period (Sanada Ten Braves), if he actually ever existed. Stories of his exploits have grown to almost fairy-tale status in Japan. He was known for his monkey-like agility and personality.

Yuri Kamanosuke (??)
Another one of the Sanada Ten Braves, though not as well known as Sasuke.

Suruga Province

Imagawa Yoshimoto (1519-1560)
A foppish but very powerful warlord who was one of the first casualties in Oda Nobunaga's rise to power. Imagawa liked wearing expensive clothing and lots of makeup in an imitation of the refined courtly style.

INFORMATION

Oushuu Province

Date Masamune (1566-1636)
Ruler of the Oushuu Province. Brilliant man, horrible personality problems. He was so ambitious that he conquered his own allies, but he also supported trade, the arts, and international exploration. He lost his eye to smallpox as a child and pulled it out by himself. Because of his lost eye, his mother deemed him unfit to take over the clan; however, he killed his own brother in order to come back to power.

Katakura Kojuurou (1557-1615)
The common name of the head of the Katakura family, who served as senior retainers to the Date clan. Kagetsuna was arguably the most famous, having served alongside Date Masamune.

Echigo Province

Uesugi Kenshin (1530-1578)
Ruler of the Echigo Province and primary rival to the warlord Takeda Shingen. Kenshin and Takeda fought five battles in a rivalry that lasted fourteen years. He once said that "wars are to be won with swords and spears, not with rice and salt."

Kasuga (??)
A completely fictional character that serves under Kenshin. There is, however, a fortress known as Kasugayama Castle that served as Kenshin's primary fortress in the Sengoku period.

INFORMATION

Owari Province

Oda Nobunaga (1534-1582)
Ruler of the Owari Province and Japan's most famous warlord. He started off as a poor landowner and fought his way up to rule almost all of Japan. He was a brutal warrior, but he was also an efficient politician and a patron of the arts.

Akechi Mitsuhide (1528-1582)
Mitsuhide was one of Nobunaga's most trusted generals, but after a reprimand that lead to his mother's death, Mitsuhide betrayed Nobunaga and forced him to commit suicide. However, Mitsuhide was killed a few days later.

Maeda Toshiie (1539-1599)
Another one of Nobunaga's leading generals.

Nouhime (1535-????)
Nobunaga's official wife, although they had no children. It is thought that she was acting as a spy for her father, the lord of Mino.

Mori Ranmaru (1565-1582)
Nobunaga's loyal attendant and lover. When Nobunaga is betrayed by Mitsuhide and forced to commit suicide, Ranmaru does as well.

Other Provinces

Mouri Motonari (1497-1591)
Ruler of the Chuugoku region in central Japan

Chousokabe Motochika (1538-1599)
Ruler of the Tosa Province

Shimazu Yoshihisa (1533-1611)
Ruler of the Satsuma Province
